

How do I pay a parking ticket?

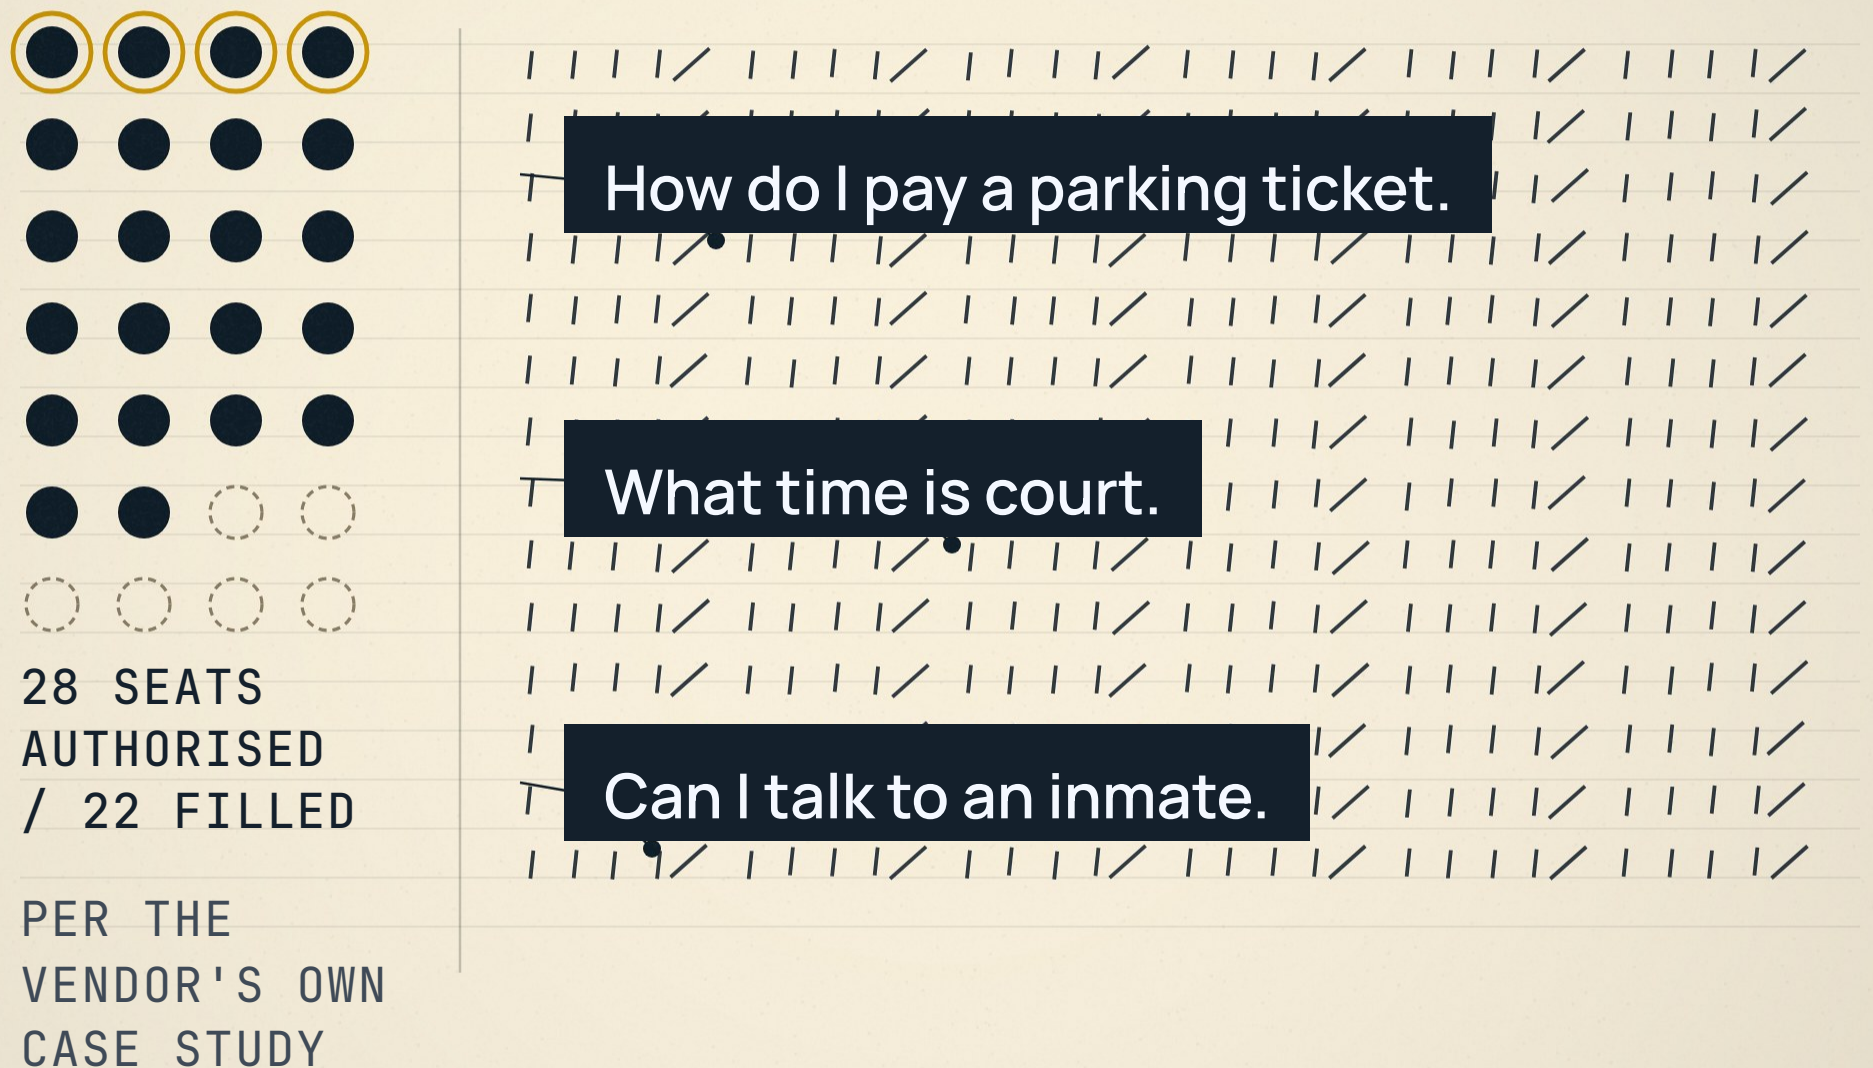

It lands on the same desk that answers 911.

41,000 CALLS
IN SEVEN MONTHS

The only number that always picks up

At least four dispatchers a shift, around the clock, per Milwaukee Magazine. Roughly 105,000 routine calls a year, per the county. Cory Lynch, the operations supervisor, says being a 24/7 department made them the default for anything to do with municipalities or police departments.

ONE TICK IS 250 CALLS

Then the accident call comes in

"Then we have to put that caller on hold to answer a 911 call that could be for an accident, and then picking the caller back up and having them start their story over again if it happens to be another dispatcher that answers it."

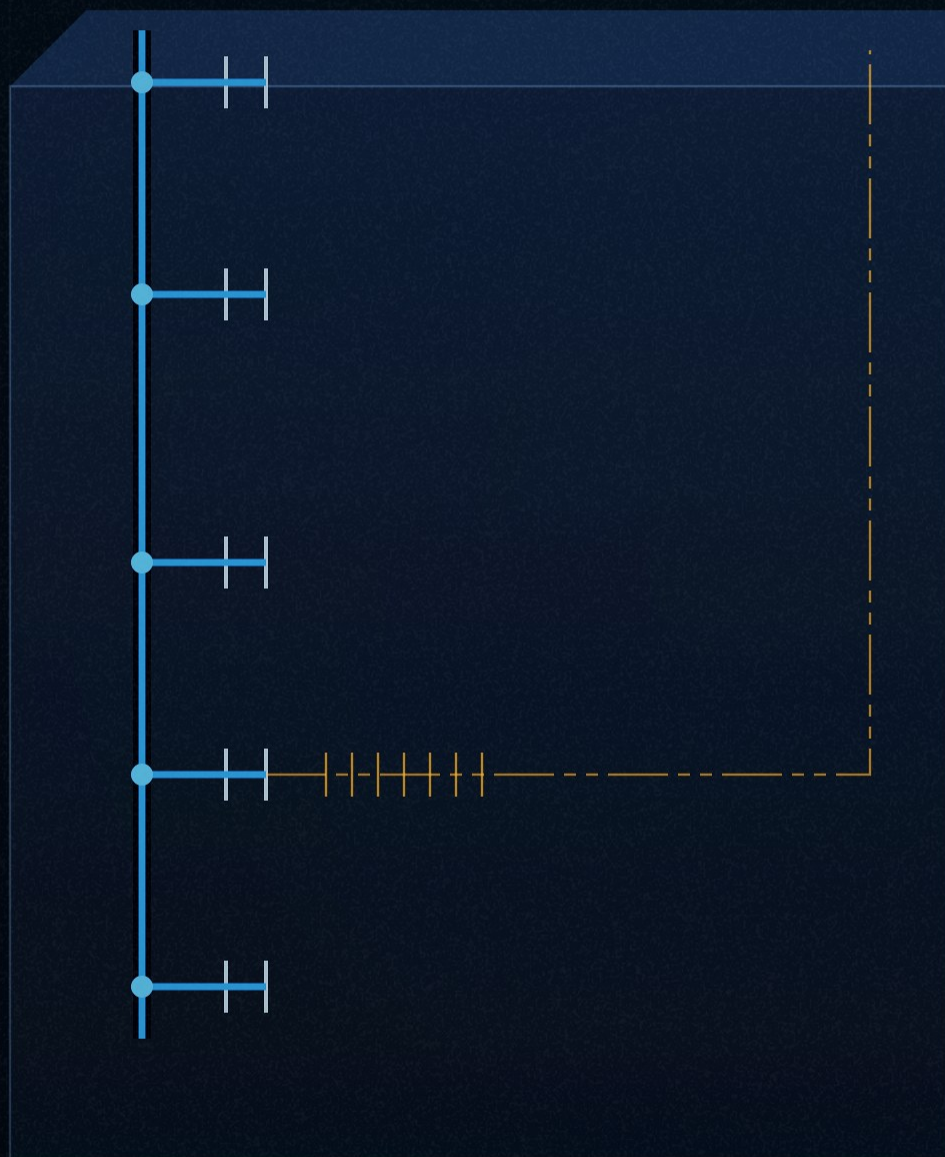

CORY LYNCH, OPERATIONS SUPERVISOR, TO WEAU

Lynch also says it has been really hard to hire and keep staff on.

They rebuilt one line and left the other alone

La Crosse bought it from a Seattle company called Aurelian. Every step above was drawn by a person before the phone ever rang. That is a workflow, rung 4 of five, and for this job rung 4 is the right answer. The vendor calls it an agent.

A person typed the list

If somebody in trouble calls the routine line, the system picks up certain hot words and sends them to a 911 dispatcher, per the county's operations supervisor. That list is not something the model worked out. Somebody sat down and typed it. The machine is matching words, not judging urgency.

The same product went sideways at another Wisconsin desk

Ozaukee County bought the same product and went live around the clock in week one. Callers asked for a sheriff when they meant a deputy. Shouting and music confused it. They cut it back to two hours a day while the vendor worked through it, and the sheriff says the vendor has been receptive.

About $67,000 in year one and about $81,000 in year two, per Milwaukee Magazine, priced on call volume. That is not a price rise. That is the product working harder, invoiced. Milwaukee Magazine put the annual price at about one employee with benefits. If your calls triple in July, model your July.

Never point it where a wrong route costs a house or a hand. A caller here says a village name or a mile marker, which is a harder version of what broke Ozaukee. Test that before you sign. Under a few thousand routine calls a year, the honest answer is a better phone tree and an online payment page.
